Task 1

Search for photos that show teachers engaging in different communities, like school communities, families and local communities, professional communities, etc.

You may request permission or approval from your Resource Teacher to take some screenshots of photo available from the school photo album/file of the school/teacher-community engagements, activities.

This is an old program hosted by the previous school that I have worked for. While the school didn't really add any monetary aspects or even had no role in procuring the devices, the school grounds still served as a distribution area for the government to provide technological access during the pandemic. I would still consider this a form of the school's community engagement. School becomes not only a place for imparting learning but it also becomes an asset to the community.

Task 2

Analyze the photo collage that you have created
Describe your photo collage in term of --

Types of community activities that teachers participate in	Teachers' purposes for engaging in community activities	Roles teachers play in the engagements	Benefits of engaging with the community	Challenges encountered	Counteractions to address them
Social Welfare & Resource Distribution: Collaborative programs with local government units (LGU) and civic organizations	Resource Mobilization: Bridging the digital divide by providing technological access (gadgets) to students during the pandemic.	Facilitator & Liaison: Coordinating between donors (LGU/Lions Club) and the student beneficiaries to ensure orderly distribution.	Enhanced Accessibility: Students gain necessary tools for learning, ensuring the continuity of education despite external crises.	Minimizing the threat for a mass spreader event.	Strict adherence to safety protocols. The school can also collaborate with the baranggay council to uphold peace and order.

Task 3

Make inferences on the value of teacher engagement in communities

Teacher engagement transforms the school from an isolated academic bubble into a vital community asset. When teachers engage, they humanize the profession and demonstrate that education is a collective social responsibility, not just a classroom requirement.

1. In your understanding, how can teachers' community engagements contribute to promote –

Teaching Practice	Student Achievement	Dignity of the Teaching Profession	Community Aspirations
Community engagement enhances teaching practice by providing teachers with a deeper understanding of their students' socio-economic backgrounds, which allows them to design more culturally relevant and responsive instructional strategies.	When teachers understand a student's home and community context, they can tailor their pedagogy to be more relevant and supportive.	By acting as community leaders, teachers earn respect beyond their subject expertise, positioning themselves as reliable pillars of society.	Teachers act as catalysts, aligning school goals with the dreams of the local community, such as improving literacy or technological proficiency.

2. To what extent should teachers actually engage with their school communities?

Teachers should engage to the extent that it enhances the learning environment without compromising their core instructional duties. This means being active participants in local councils and school-parent associations to ensure the school remains responsive to community needs.

	3. What do you think are the factors that hinder /prevent teachers to engage with their communities? The primary factors include heavy administrative workloads, burnout, and a lack of institutional support or incentives. Additionally, a disconnect between the school's curriculum and the community's immediate socio-economic needs can create a barrier to meaningful interaction.
	4. Teachers are well known and recognized as both school and community leaders? In what way? Please describe briefly. Teachers serve as community leaders by acting as "intellectual beacons." They are often sought after to lead local committees, facilitate community resolutions, and serve as poll workers or health advocates, bridging the gap between government initiatives and the grassroots level.
	5. How could teachers strike a balance between academic/professional responsibilities and engagement in community activities? Balance is achieved through integration rather than addition. Teachers should look for ways to make community engagement part of the curriculum (e.g., service learning) and set healthy boundaries by prioritizing activities that directly impact student welfare and professional growth.
	6. As practicing / future teacher, how do you involve /engage yourself in school and community activities/programs? In what areas? Please describe briefly. To what extent is your engagement? Why? I focus on educational equity and resource accessibility. My engagement involves facilitating the distribution of learning materials and technology to ensure no student is left behind due to socio-economic status. I participate to the extent of a proactive coordinator, ensuring that the school remains a functional asset to the community at large.
